Audiences love 'The Gypsy's Curse'

BY KRISTEN BROCKMAN
Antelope Staff

The UNK theatre department rocks the house involving the audience in their fun in "The Gypsy's Curse," their winter production. The story is a melodrama written in the old style by Charlotte Francis in the 1930s. Janice Fronczak, an associate professor of theatre, directed the performance. She chose the production after finding the script at Kearney Public Library. This is the first time that UNK has performed a melodrama.

"I read it and loved it," Fronczak said. "It's so old that it's not even published anymore."

The melodrama format allows for an entertaining experience for both audience and cast. At various times throughout the show, action on stage freezes and a character addresses the audience in an aside, usually asking a question.

Audience members were encouraged to not only react to, but answer the actor.

According to Fronczak, there is still a serious tone to the play to offset the comedic moments.

"The actors play real people with real objectives," Fronczak said.

The plot of the story focuses on a brother and sister, Horatio and Hortense Lovelace, as they deal with their father's recent death. Horatio returns from college with an even bigger announcement, he's engaged!

This does not settle well with his overprotective sister, especially when Mary, his fiancée, arrives with him.

Danell Will, a senior family studies major from Kearney, captured the stuck-up attitude of Hortense.

Nate White, a freshman math education major from Pierre, S.D., and Jillian Parker, a sophomore musical theatre major from Goodland, Kan., made an attractive couple, portraying the sweet and innocent love of Horatio and Mary.

Things get more complicated when the sly Baron Wolfgang Von Schlemiel appears and immediately sets his sights on Mary. We learn about his villainous plans through asides to the audience. No matter how devious he might be, Ryan Hruza, a sophomore theatre major from Ord, was all comedian in his portrayal of the smarmy Wolfgang.

The youngest member of the cast was seventh grader Rosamond Thalken of Kearney. Thalken nailed the frail innocence of her character, Little Patience. Thalken is no stranger to the UNK Department of Music and Performing Arts; her dad Todd plays the piano for many of the Music department recitals. Although it is unusual to cast a young actor in a show, it is a great experience for everyone involved.

"We all learn together," Fronczak said. "It is a great way to bring the Kearney community into UNK theatre."

Nelson discusses government spending with group of 60

BY LAURA LARSEN
Antelope Staff

Sen. Ben Nelson visited UNK's student union Wednesday, Feb. 20, to talk with students about topics ranging from the current presidential race to controversies surrounding government spending. A group of 60 students listened while the senator made his case.

Earlier this year, Sen. Nelson formally endorsed Barack Obama in his candidacy for the White House. During his opening remarks, Nelson referred to a recent conversation with Sen. Obama when Nelson said, "I'm glad the Potomac froze over, and now the rest of us can walk on water."

In talking about the presidential race Sen. Nelson conveyed that he wants to see the campaigns continue to talk about issues important to the American people rather than engage in personal attacks on one another.

After discussing Obama's candidacy, Nelson addressed the gridlock that currently exists in Washington. "We need more building up rather than tearing down," Nelson said.

The senator argued in order for Washington to move beyond gridlock members from both parties need to shift their focus from partisan politics to working together.

The majority of the senator's comments focused on a form of government spending commonly referred to as earmarks, a way for congressional members to ensure federal funding for projects in their home districts.

Some Kearney-area projects that have benefited from earmarks include the new planetarium coming to campus and the new I-80 exit set to begin construction in 2009.

According to Nelson, earmarks often serve to improve infrastructure, research, innovation and culture throughout the nation.

The senator also set out to dispel some myths surrounding earmark spending. One of the myths he pointed to was that fewer earmarks will lead to smaller government. According to Nelson, in the absence of earmarks, funding decisions will be made by executive branch agencies rather than elected officials.

Despite the benefits that may be a result of earmark spending, they have become a source of criticism in the media. "Earmarks have become an easy target for attack," Nelson said.

Nelson argued that earmarks help to ensure small states like Nebraska are able to effectively compete on the national scale.

As Nelson pointed out, if he was not finding places in Nebraska to spend federal funds, those funds would be spent on projects in other states across the country.

Recent legislation requires members report all earmarks they have proposed and have passed. This information is must posted on their Web sites where members of the public can have easy access to the information. "The transparency is there," Nelson said.

Sen. Nelson's visit was sponsored by the political science department, and the Locke and Key Society. To learn more about either of these organizations and upcoming events visit the political science homepage at www.unk.edu

'Lost boy' shares refugee story

BY RACHEAL SMITH
Antelope Staff

On Feb. 20, the "Lost Boy of Sudan," John Dau, shared with UNK students, faculty and community members what he called his "living testimony" and a story of perseverance.

Looking at John Dau today, one would never guess the atrocities he faced as a young man. Now, living with his wife and 15-month-old baby in Syracuse, N.Y., he recently built a new home for his family and a year and a half ago became an American citizen.

Most would see a man who was living a typical life, but Dau's life has not always been so good.

Dau's story started when he was a 13-year-old boy living with his family in his native village. There had been war between the Northern Sudanese Muslims and the Southern Sudanese Christians since 1983. In 1987, Dau's village was attacked, he was forced to flee for his life, and was separated from his family in the process. He began to walk on foot to find refuge, and on his way was joined by other people who had been attacked.

They travelled three months and finally reached Ethiopia where they were placed in a refugee camp. Dau shared how the camp was consumed with disease and many children died every day.

After four years, the government in Ethiopia decided they did not want the Sudanese refugees there anymore and told Dau's camp of 27,000 people they had seven days to leave the country.

Because of disease, attacks by the Ethiopian government and dangers such as crocodiles, only 18,000 people made it out of Ethiopia back into Sudan.

Dau stayed in Sudan for nine months, and then decided to leave once more because of all the violence. After six months of travel, he found himself in a refugee camp in Kenya. It was here that he finally was able to start school at 17. "Now it was good, because this is when things started like education and school," Dau said.

In 1999, Dau said that people from the United States visited his camp and told the people there they were going to start helping them to come to America. Dau said he was very excited about this and hoped that he would be picked. In 2001, he received his wish and was sent to Syracuse, N.Y.

Dau had many jobs and was also able to go to college in

Meet the candidates for Student Government

Grant Campbell: Student Body President/Regent Candidate
Cade Craig: Student Body Vice President Candidate

Timothy Hruza: Student Body President/Regent Candidate
Angela Reynolds: Student Body Vice President Candidate

Cristobal Salinas: Student Body President/Regent Candidate
Patrick Ackerman: Student Body Vice President Candidate

RETENTION

The UNK Community is currently experiencing some dramatic changes in its student population. Campbell and Craig are already in the process of working with Student Affairs on an initiative for "students to help students" become adapted to the college experience.

recreation areas are a priority for Campbell and Craig. With the help of LPAC advisors, discussions have included how to utilize our "green space" on campus for student programming. Concerts, programs, and festivals will benefit from the expansion of outdoor areas around campus.

PARKING

Parking is an issue which is always on the platform of candidates. Campbell and Craig have already taken complaints about zone parking to Vice Chancellor Barbara Johnson, and she has assured that the current zone parking scheme is going to be dismantled next fall. There are also several construction projects plaguing the campus, and this hurts parking for the time being. However, we have a few of our own suggestions and are open to other suggestions as to what students would like to see within the next three years when parking will again become an issue we can influence.

RECYCLING

Campbell and Craig have already begun taking the necessary steps to implement a campus wide recycling project. Discussion with city officials is the next step in the project, which will bring the Kearney Community and UNK together to help make our campus a healthier, greener place to live and learn.

STUDENT JUDICIAL SERVICE

Campbell and Craig are exploring the possibilities of providing access to legal advice for our students. This service would assist students in solving housing/rental disputes as well as provide a place to go when students are ready to graduate and need assistance in legal matters.

4) Campus Beautification: Campbell and Craig have been brainstorming ideas on how to make the Union and its courtyards more student friendly. Features such as more trees, picnic tables and outdoor

CONVENIENCE

Parking: We understand that parking on campus is a concern for all students. It is one of our goals to provide students with a more user-friendly parking service. Our first goal is to eliminate the current zone restrictions by combining lots B & C to better suit residents living on the eastern part of campus.

Scheduling of facilities: It is extremely difficult to schedule activities in many facilities, especially the Student Union. Since individuals and organizations pay fees that help operate the Union, they should get priority whenever possible when reserving rooms in the facility that they fund.

Recycling: More academic buildings need to have recycling receptacles, especially for plastic; therefore, we will explore ways of implementing a campus-wide recycling program.

Transfer Hours: Transfer hours are always a complaint on campus. We will explore the option of adjusting these hours to help accommodate students' needs.

Improved International Student Services: At UNK, international students help to diversify our university by creating a positive learning environment on a global scale and ought to be treated accordingly. The current programs in place, including conversation tables and other services provide opportunities but should continue to be strengthened. Advertisement and additional programs should be explored to strengthen this asset to our University.

ACADEMICS

Minus System for GPA – The University is an institution which should support the best interest of its student. The minus system of the grading scale takes a negative toll on the GPA of students on campus. We would like to work with the faculty of the University to voice student concerns for the policy and attempt to change it.

Library/Study Hours – Study areas and opportunities are of the utmost importance to the academic interests of students. We would like to work with the administration of the University and the library to possibly extend weeknight hours and possibly hours during "Dead Week" and "Finals Week."

Blackboard – Student Senate recently passed a bill authored by Senator Christensen regarding faculty use of Blackboard. We would like to pursue this matter and work with faculty to utilize all of the features of the Blackboard service; specifically, updated online grading, assignments, and communication among students and between students and the professor.

LOPER PRIDE Government Affairs Committee – The Government Affairs Committee, created and chaired by Senator Hruza, has given UNK students a voice in local, state and national politics. This tool allows UNK to collaborate with other institutions in a push to ensure the best interests of Nebraska students. We vow to build this committee and support it in order to bolster the presence of UNK students' voices in those issues which affect them directly.

Campus Cares – The Campus Cares program created by Student Body President Amber Lewis has the potential to be amazing for UNK. We look forward to fostering the growth and expansion of this program to maintain the aesthetic aspects of campus.

School Spirit – Extracurricular activities are vital to the success of a University. Loper athletics have been extremely successful, and students on campus need to continue to grow in support of our amazing program. This can be done through making students more aware of what's going on and reviving the Loper Legion or implementing something similar.

P. L. A. N.

P-PHYSICAL COMMUNITY

Green UNK- The primary focus of our platform is to establish UNK as a green campus by raising awareness. We will work with the Residence Hall Association, Facilities and the Green UNK program to expand recycling on campus. We will add more recycling receptacles around campus to easily facilitate student involvement. We also will work with the recycling center in Kearney to find effective, new ways to further elevate the recycling program.

Campus Security- Another focus of our platform is campus security. Everyone should feel safe walking from building to building at all times. In order to ensure that all students, faculty, staff and administrators feel secure, we will look into the implementation of a better lighting system. This will include looking into the cost of adding more lights around campus or replacing light bulbs with brighter more energy efficient bulbs.

Parking- Parking is a major issue on campus. Realistically, we know that there are only so many things that can be done on this campus due to money, time, and space constraints. However, we believe that the best way to work with parking issues is to give a voice to the students who are parking on campus. We will organize forums about parking issues with administration and parking services to allow students to voice their ideas. Following the forums, we will keep students informed about how university officials plan to implement their ideas.

L-LOPER COMMUNITY

Loper Pride- In an effort to build-up campus-wide support of student athletics, organizations and activities, we would like to establish a new tradition on campus. Every Friday, students and faculty members would be encouraged to wear blue and gold to show Loper pride. We believe that it is important for all students, faculty, staff, and administrators to support each other and this new tradition would be one great way for everyone to show UNK pride.

A-Academic Community

Meet your Professor- It is vital for faculty to have a better understanding of student life and campus organizations. Positive interaction between students and faculty is essential for classroom success. One way for UNK to build classroom success is to have faculty members dine with students in Chartwells or participate in student events on campus. Our plan is to have these social events throughout the year.

Master Calendar- To have a well rounded college experience, we believe people need to be involved on campus. The problem is many students don't always know what is going happening on campus. We will establish a master calendar in which all organizations and departments will be able to submit their events. We will post these events so that students know what is going on.

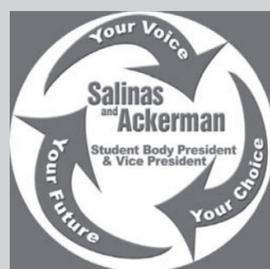

N-NETWORK COMMUNITY

The Heart of UNK- It is the goal of Student Government to be the hub of all other organizations. We are committed to be the organization that all other organizations go for support, whether it is through networking, funding, concerns or just questions. The doors of student government will always be open and ready to assist. The student body president and vice-president will attend meetings and events to show support on behalf of Student Government.

Delegates in Student Government- Diversity is important to UNK. We feel that our student government should be composed of students who can accurately voice the opinions of students across campus. We will create delegate positions that will represent a wide variety of students and organizations. These positions will include, International, Greek, Athletic, RHA, and additional delegates. The delegates will network with student government to represent and voice the opinion of their organizations.

Vote on March 5 and 6, and let your voice be heard.

Help decide the future of UNK Student Government. Voting booths will be in the Student Union from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. & 5:30 p.m. to 7 p.m. Wed. & Thurs. Booths will also be available in the Library, HYPER & West Center 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Wed. & Thurs.

Java and Job Stuff offers more than help on resumes

BY ALISSA ROBERTS
Antelope Staff

Career Services has hosted Java and Job Stuff for the past five years on Wednesdays offering students the opportunity to come into the Career Services office without an appointment to have someone help students with resumes, job interviews and career and major guidance.

Dawn Lenz, career coordinator in the Career Services office, offers several tips for creating a resume and practicing a job interview. She said the first step is to create a resume if a student doesn't already have one.

"We actually give students a resume packet," Lenz said.

The resume packet includes a list of active verbs to use on a resume, sample cover letter and a sample resume.

"It is important to develop a good letter. The cover letter is the first impression an employer has of you," Lenz said.

Lenz said it is important to have a resume prepared even if a student is not graduating and searching for a job. There will be class assignments and unexpected situations in which a student will find it helpful to have a resume on hand.

Important items on a resume are volunteer experience and academic experience as well as paid experience. After a resume has been sent out, students should be prepared for an interview, Lenz said.

"Don't do a self assessment before an interview," Lenz said.

Lenz said practice was most helpful for students going out to job interviews. A practice interview at Career Services allowed students the chance to practice wearing professional clothing and be specific with a potential employer. Career Services also offered practice interviews for graduate school for students in the medical and health fields.

Lenz said Java and Job Stuff also offered students the chance to come into the Career Services office for help with finding or changing their major.

"We do a lot for students that don't have a major or are unhappy with their major," Lenz said.

Kristi Scott, a junior family studies major from Belgrade, first went into Career Services for help with finding a major to fit her personality and skills.

"I found their Web site really helpful when looking at an online handbook of career descriptions. There are also personality assessments that link your results with different majors and careers," Scott said.

Scott said she found the lo-perCAREERS Web site through Career Service helpful also.

"It's really cool because you can post your resume on there so companies you are interested in can look at that and possibly schedule interviews at Career Services. Right now it's helpful because I'm looking for a good internship, and this Web site lists a lot of businesses to look at," Scott said.

Syracuse, but John Dau's story did not end here. After he had finished his education, Dau felt that he had been given so many opportunities that he wanted to give back. Dau said that he believed that one should always, "try and give back to those who have helped you."

Dau started several foundations to help the Sudanese people such as the Sudanese Lost Boys Foundation of New York, American Care and the John Dau Sudan Foundation. He also has written a book to share his experiences called "God Grew Tired of Us," which has since been made into a documentary produced by Brad Pitt and narrated by Nicole Kidman.

John Dau shared in the end that, "My purpose in telling you all these things is not to brag, but to tell you to never, ever give up," he said of his purpose for speaking.

"No matter what has happened to you, don't let yourself be held hostage by what happened yesterday."

ROBO-SHAQ'S BACK

Sixth Annual Robotics Competition sends two seniors to regionals

BY HILARY KRUGER
Antelope Staff

Four teams, four robots, only one winner.

Feb. 14, 2008, brought the Sixth Annual Robotics Competition to UNK.

Students in Sherri Harms' artificial intelligence class had five weeks to completely design, build and program a Lego Mindstorm NXT robot. Then the teams played one-on-one using their basketball-playing robotic all-star.

Cameron Push, a UNK junior and member of the winning team, said that it took three weeks to program their robot to play basketball.

Harms explained how very complicated it is to get a robot to pick up a ball and make a basket.

"It's amazing what biological creatures go through in order to work," Harms said.

The winners of the competition will now compete at the regional MICS competition in LaCrosse, Wis., on April 12. The winning team consisted of Kyle Williams, and Brandon McCallister who are both seniors, and of course Robo-Shaq.

Push said that they won because they had a simple format that got the job done and that a good team is better than the best robot.

The robot competition wasn't all fun and games, however. The students also had to write a paper, and the entire project counts towards almost 15 percent of their grade.

AMA reaches out for new members

BY DANIEL APOLIUS
Antelope Staff

The UNK American Marketing Association chapter held its awareness week with a hope to draw more chapter members through activities, speakers and giveaways.

Jake Riley, the chapter's Vice President of Communications said, "We struggle a little bit because many people are not aware of what exactly our club does and what benefits the organization offers."

Francesca Hunt, the president of the Kearney AMA Chapter, said, "We really want to reach anyone interested in business. I personally am a graphic design major, but I see the practicality of marketing a product with other skills I have."

Riley said, "What the club allows members to do is network with local businesses and helps them gain insight from people in a variety of fields."

This week's events helped touch on the diversity of activities and opportunities the AMA offers.

For Tuesday's event, the AMA hosted a number of speakers from the Kearney community businesses including Michelle Hilkemann from the Hilltop Mall, Shawn Fairbanks of the UNK Athletics and Stacy Plautz from The Cellar Bar and Grill. Each speaker touched on the importance of marketing in their field and networking with other professionals.

On Wednesday, chapter members assisted the Campus Kitchen with meals. "I helped with this once before so it's nice. This time I got to help prepare peanut butter cookies for 87 people," Hunt said.

On Thursday, the UNK American Marketing Association

chapter named Cory Kruse 2007 Marketer of the Year.

Kruse was the charter president for the UNK AMA chapter in 1991. Current UNK AMA chapter members look to Kruse as a role model for applying marketing knowledge gained during college in a way that benefits the local community.

Friday marked the end of the activities with a drawing for items at West Center.

When asked if it was challenging to reach people during the awareness week Riley said, "The hardest thing is to compete for peoples' time, but because marketing is so broad we also benefit from having a combination of students with many majors and minors."

If you are interested in joining the American Marketing Association you can send an email to ama@unk.edu.

Lopers struggle outside

BY AMANDA BELL
 Antelope Staff

The UNK Softball Team had a rough outing this past weekend in Amarillo, Texas. The Lopers finished the weekend 1-3, with their only winning coming in the first game against Eastern New Mexico. The Lopers suffered losses to Southeastern Oklahoma, Fort Hays State, and Southwestern Oklahoma State.

Although the Lopers lost to Southeastern Oklahoma, they only allowed four runs against them by the reputable team. Pitcher, Ashley Guyle, a junior from Mead, pitched the full game and battled until the end.

"They were a tough team with a tough reputation, but we rose to the competition. Our defense played very well but we couldn't get our sticks going," Guyle said

This was the first time that the Lopers have been outdoors. From the first week in October, until last week, the Lopers have been inside of the Health and Sports Center. The transition from the gym floor to dirt and grass was more difficult than the team anticipated.

"Playing in a gym is not playing on a field," coach Holly Carnes said. Carnes is entering her eighth season as the head softball coach.

"This may be one of the best teams that I have ever coached and our leadership is definitely one of our strengths," Carnes said.

The one win the Lopers had was a 1-0 defensive shutout. The only run was scored by freshman, Cassie Keck's solo shot home run in the bottom of the fifth inning. Keck, a true freshman from Blair, started all four games and is anticipated to play all season.

"It felt really good. At that point I was doing whatever I could to get my team going," Keck said.

The second day of the tournament brought 30 MPH winds, which only added to the outdoor elements that the Lopers were not accustomed to.

"We had trouble adjusting to the wind and the way that the ball carries in the wind," Carnes said.

"It was tough for our outfielders I imagine. There was a lack of communication between the infield and the outfield at times," Molly Langerak, a senior from Erie, Colo., said.

"As far as hitting goes, if you take away the wind, a lot of the fly balls we had would have been base hits, but that's still not an excuse," Langerak said.

Langerak was an all-conference player last year and was voted all-region catcher. She was nominated for All-American and was also voted pre-season catcher of the year by coaches in the RMAC for the upcoming season. She had a two-run RBI when she hit a double in the third game. The two runs were not enough to pull off a win though.

Although the losses were tough, the Lopers must look ahead to this coming weekend. Conference play begins this Saturday with the ladies traveling to Durango, Colo. to play Fort Lewis College. UNK went 2-2 last year with Fort Lewis as their season opener.

"We need to stay intense this upcoming weekend. If we get behind, we can't give up," Langerak said.

"We need to get outside as much as possible between now and then and get in game-like situations. We need the pressure on so that we can toughen up," Carnes said.

"We know what we need to work on and we know that we can only get better from here," Michelle Gaunt, a senior from McCook said.

"We got those first games out of the way, and it's all uphill from there," Gaunt said.

A wrestler's dream comes true: eating to make weight

Sutton and Ross bulk up to fill 184 lb. and 197 lb. spots

BY HANNAH HOTOVY
 Antelope Staff

Paul Sutton and Derek Ross are using a tactic to make weight that many wrestlers never get to use: eating more food.

Sutton and Ross were originally wrestling 174 pounds and 184 pounds, respectively, until the Loper wrestling team experienced a few holes in their line up due to injuries.

The "holes" had to be filled and part of that was done by bumping up Sutton and Ross to bigger weight classes. At first, the bump was done as a temporary solution to fill in the holes, which meant that Sutton and Ross had to continue to weigh-in at 174 and 184 pounds, but then they were wrestling guys at a weight class above them.

At times, this seemed like an advantage to them.

"I didn't feel like there was any pressure. It was unexpected for me to win at a weight class above me, so I knew it was just bonus points if I did win," Sutton said.

Finally, after several of the wrestlers became permanently out for the season, Coach Bauer realized that Sutton and Ross needed to officially move up to 184 and 197 pounds so they were wrestling their opponents at their full-potential.

"From the beginning of the season, I thought that I might go 197 pounds, so it has not been much of a shock," Ross said.

Sutton and Ross's first official dual wrestling at a higher weight was against Western State. Sutton and Ross have held their own, despite the fact that they are wrestling bigger guys.

"We are out-sized. The bigger guys aren't as quick, but they are powerful. It's been an adjustment to change speed to power," Ross said. "I am a little quicker and have a variety of different moves that the big guys can't do, which really helps."

Sutton felt the same way. "The biggest advantage about wrestling 184 pounds instead of 174 is that I am quicker. Also, the stress of cutting weight isn't there," Sutton said.

Besides getting to eat more, Sutton and Ross have been able to lift harder in order to build more muscle mass. Ross also mentioned that his weight gain has helped him in the practice room.

"It's good for me to work-out with Tervel everyday. Since I am closer in weight to Tervel, I get more out of our practices and drills. It helps Tervel too, since he has a wrestler closer to his weight to drill with."

Ross and Sutton's fellow teammates have seen the benefit that the weight gain has done for the two wrestlers.

"They are both so tough and competitive that even wrestling up a weight they have given top ranked wrestlers all they could handle," teammate Joe Ellenberger, said.

As the season winds down, both Sutton and Ross look forward to what their new weight advantage can do for them.

"I think I can compete with most of the 184 pound wrestlers," Sutton said. "I am really excited for the end of the season because I have a good shot at going to nationals and becoming an All-American."

Fast food challenge ends, diets begin

In the battle of redheads, Wendy prevails and claims fast food crown

BY GRIFFITH WATSON
 Antelope Staff

The tournament is over and the champion has been crowned. McDonald's and Wendy's squared off in an epic battle of hamburgers and French-fried potatoes. Before the results of the championship match of the Fast-Food Challenge are announced, here is a quick recap of how the two finalists made it this far.

The tournament opened up in week one with McDonald's taking on Runza. The golden arches made short work of Runza. Cabbage and meat were no match for McChicken's and hot fudge sundaes.

Wendy's had a closer call in the first round as they slipped past an upset bid from Jimmy John's. The sandwich shop made a strong bid to take down Wendy's, but the Frosty helped the restaurant skate by.

The semifinals saw McDonald's face off with Amigos. While Amigos might have some of the best food ever made on their menu, it wasn't enough to take down a national powerhouse like McDonald's.

Wendy's dominated their opponent, Sonic. It wasn't even close to enough to write any more about.

So, the stage has been set for the McDonald's/Wendy's showdown. Once again, here are the judges for the Fast Food Challenge.

Kyle Smith, a junior from Blair, has made it clear that he enjoys eating fast food. He has voted for both Wendy's and McDonald's in the past, so his vote will surely take some deliberation.

Cole Archer, a senior sports administration major and Kearney native, has shown a certain affinity for the end zone. It seems whichever restaurant takes him past the goal line will surely get his vote.

Last, but not least, is Salt Dog extraordinaire, Cody Lusero. He is a senior BMIS and economics major from Papillion. Lusero enjoys long walks on the beach, sunsets and misses his dog Jewn, who he had to give away last semester. He is hungry, and ready to eat and vote.

As the food was devoured and cholesterol was raised, the votes began to come in. The first to make up his mind was Smith.

"McDonald's has my vote," Smith said. "Even though Wendy's has a special place in my heart, McDonald's is the one for me."

With the score one to zero, in favor of McDonald's, Lusero evened up the score with a vote for Wendy's.

"I'm just sick and tired of eating fast food," Lusero said.

"I'm voting for Wendy's because it makes me feel less bloated."

With the verdict coming down to the last vote, Archer went down with an eating injury.

"I can't do it," Archer said. "I was catching fly patterns and going deep, and I got horrible stomach pains."

As Archer weakly spiked the ball in the endzone, the tournament was in jeopardy.

With the man, the myth and the legend down for the count, a guest judge was brought in to decide the championship. Tony Kulhanek, a professional gamer and organizational communications major with a minor in Ninjitsu from Kearney, had to step in.

"I'm honored just to be in the presence of a Saltdog," Kulhanek said.

After eating both Wendy's and McDonald's, Kulhanek made his vote.

"Even though I would rather go to Wal-Mart to get a sub and a frozen pizza, I vote for Wendy's," Kulhanek said.

There it is. Wendy's wins and McDonald's is the first loser. As the judges have eaten nothing but fast food for the past few weeks, a well deserved diet of celery sticks and water has been put into place. Congratulations to Wendy's, they win absolutely nothing.

UNK hosts RMAC first round

Win over weekend lands men home-court advantage

BY SCOTT LEVY
Antelope Staff

The men's basketball team had a big victory over Colorado Springs this past Saturday. The final score was 106-94, which gave them home court advantage for the first round of the RMAC Tournament.

The team started the season by losing over seven games.

Coach Kevin Lofton who has been the Men's Basketball Co-Head Coach for 13 years was nervous about beginning the season.

"We had to learn on the fly. Beginning the season with such a young team was hard and very nerve wracking," Lofton said.

After a losing streak to open the season and by being lead by sophomores, the team rebounded back with two wins in a row.

As the team moved on into the season, Coach Lofton was worried about having the sophomores carry the load of the team.

"It is hard on the young guys to carry the load so we need everyone to step up and be ready to play every night," Lofton said. "We just need to take one game at a time and we will do just fine."

So the heat was on and the team did step up by finishing the season winning 8-10 games and beating the number one ranked team in the RMAC East division on the road.

"It was a big win for us beating the number one ranked team on the road. It is nerve racking to wonder which Loper team is going to show up for us," Lofton said.

But with the big win Saturday over Colorado-Spring the Lopers will host the first round of the RMAC Tournament.

"We are only as good as our last game we play, so this win should carry a lot of momentum into the RMAC tournament starting next week," Lofton said.

The Lopers have been playing great since the slow start and have a great shot in the RMAC Tournament.

"I am pleased with the progress of the team now all we have to do is play a bit more consistent and not worry about how we play and just play like we did to finish out the season," Lofton said.

The RMAC Tournament will start on Feb. 29, 2008. The first round of the tournament will be held on UNK campus.

"We have the momentum going into the tournament so now we need to play with a sense of urgency and be ready for anything. Now is the time not to hold anything back," Lofton said.

"We are only as good as the last game we play, so this win should carry a lot of momentum into the RMAC tournament starting next week."

Pack it in PURPLE

Storm prepares for "packed" arena

KEARNEY – The Tri-City Storm of the United States Hockey League announced today that the team will be hosting the 2nd Annual "Pack It In Purple" game on Saturday, March 1, 2008 when the Storm hosts the Omaha Lancers at the First Tier Event Center.

"Pack It In Purple" is an annual event that is centered around the United Way Foundation. As fans are encouraged to wear purple to Saturday's game, the players will also be wearing specialized purple jerseys that will be auctioned off after the game. In the past seven years, the Storm organization has raised close to $100,000 for the non-profit organization. All of the money from the jersey auction will benefit the United Way of the Kearney Area.

While fans are encouraged to wear purple to this event, the team has produced special "Purple Reign" t-shirts for this event. Fans can pre-order t-shirts and tickets by calling the Storm offices at (308) 338-8809.

These t-shirts will also be available at Friday and Saturday night's games. In conjunction with this event, the Storm will also be holding the "Most Purple Person" contest during the 2nd intermission Saturday night.

In addition, the Storm also announced today that their mascot, Stormy, will be hitting the road to kick-off this year's "Pack It In Purple" night with "Stormy's Political Road Show."

Stormy will be traveling to Kearney businesses, starting on Wednesday, to kick-off "Stormy's Political Road Show." Fans will have a chance to visit Stormy at local businesses, win free tickets, buy tickets for Saturday's game and also purchase special t-shirts.

Stormy's campaign goal is to have people come visit him and sign their "promise" to wear purple to Saturday's home game with the Omaha Lancers. All of Stormy's supporters will be given special Storm sticker and a chance to win free tickets to the game.

Follow Stormy's Political Road Show in the Kearney Hub, log on to www.stormhockey.com or call the Storm office at (308) 338-8809 to learn more and to track Stormy down!

Lopers go pink for win on and off the court

First ever Think Pink night big success for UNK, Komen Foundation

BY GRIFFITH WATSON
Antelope Staff

Blue and gold usually dominate the Health and Sports Center when the Lopers take the court, but this past Thursday, pink was the color of choice. As the UNK Women's Basketball team took the court against Regis University, "Think Pink" Night was in full swing in Kearney.

The women's basketball team joined up with the Susan G. Komen Foundation to help raise awareness about the fight against breast cancer.

The Lopers took the court for warm-ups wearing pink t-shirts and sporting pink shoe laces. Regis University got into the act as well, also donning the pink t-shirts for pre-game. The scorer's table was decked out in pink with all of the staff getting involved in the event.

"I'll wear pink to support the cause," Peter Yazvac, the director for UNK Athletics' media relations, said. "In my normal, everyday life I wouldn't wear it."

Fans that dressed in pink for the game were rewarded with free admission, a commemorative "Think Pink" pin, and a free bag of popcorn courtesy of Runza.

As the game got under way, the Loper women removed their pink warm-ups to show off the pink uniforms they were wearing for the night. "I think it is a pretty cool thing that is going on because there has been so much support nationwide," Melissa Hinkley, a senior forward and journalism major from Lincoln, said. "I know the whole team was pretty excited to wear the pink uniforms, head bands, and socks. I don't even like the color but I was excited to show some support for breast cancer awareness."

Before and during the contest fans had the chance to pledge to donate one dollar for every rebound the Lopers collected during the game, or five dollars for every three-pointer the Lopers made. All the proceeds will be donated to the Susan G. Komen Foundation.

"Kearney has always been a community that supports events such as this. We are proud to use our athletic stage to help promote cancer awareness," Assistant Athletic Director Shawn Fairbanks said.

Even the half-time promotion was pink-themed, with a version of musical chairs played to Aerosmith's "Pink."

Representatives from Good Samaritan Hospital were on hand to provide information to Loper fans about the fight against breast cancer.

Overall, the event was a big success. "Doing events like this is great for our department. Often times, we get caught up in the day-to-day and lose sight of the things that matter," Fairbanks said. "Promoting a great cause in a fun way is a reminder to all of us about why we do what we do."

The "Think Pink" program has been used to raise more than $250,000 by university athletic teams over the last four years. Susan G. Komen for the Cure was founded in 1982 by Nancy Brinker to honor the memory of her sister, Susan G. Komen, who died from breast cancer at the age of 36.

With the Lopers victorious and funds raised to support the fight against breast cancer, pink was definitely the new blue, at least for one night.

Poets unite to 'slam' each other

Students make their slam poetry debut at The Roman and go up against the champs

BY SHELLY FOX
Antelope Staff

Poets and poetry fans flocked to the Roman Thursday, Feb. 21 to see students from the Performance Poetry and Prose class test their Slam Poetry skills against other slammers from the area.

At a Poetry Slam, poets read one poem per round and are not allowed to use props, costumes or musical instruments.

The poem must be of their own composition and can't be more than three minutes (with a ten-second grace period).

Depending on the number of poets, approximately half are eliminated after each of the three rounds until a winner is chosen by the five randomly-selected judges in the audience.

Although several graduate and undergraduate students in the Performance class had participated in Slam Poetry before, most were taking the stage for the first time.

Among their competition were several members from Lincoln's Star City Slam team includ-

"Just jump in and do it. You never know how you might do, even if you're not prepared at all."

Slam Poet*

ing Oracle Jones of Lincoln, UNL student Stacy Fox and Kearney Horizon Middle School teacher Sam Stecher, who also organized the Slam.

"The crowd was pretty sweet," Stecher said. "It was the largest crowd I've seen at a slam in Kearney."

Before the official Slam competition began on Thursday, poets were invited to the stage for an open mic performance where most of the students chose to reveal their poetry for the first time.

"We have a talented group of writers and performers that are starting to make themselves known," Stecher said.

Open mic, like the rest of the night's poems, varied greatly in topic. Some were funny and light-hearted while others were more serious or dark.

From weird dreams and dissections to sex and special education, the poets kept the audiences' ears pricked the entire night.

"After a while everyone knows yours and you know everyone's," Fox said. "I love hearing someone's brand new poem that no one has ever heard before."

Ultimately, it was Stecher who made it through all three rounds and took home first prize.

"Write a lot. Practice a lot. If you have one poem that you wrote because you were "inspired" that's fine but it takes more," Stecher said.

Though none of the students made it past the first round, they all enjoyed the Slam Poetry experience.

"The points aren't the point, the poetry is," Fox said.

It sounds like Slam may have found a new home in Kearney.

Stecher said he'll be putting on three or four Slams in Kearney in 2008, as long as he can find some help.

"It would be great to have more slams in Kearney. However, somebody needs to step up to the organization role. I don't want to be that guy," Stecher said.

Any volunteers who would like to help keep Slam Poetry coming to Kearney would be much appreciated, both by the poets and the fans.

The Academy Awards celebrate their 80th year running

BY JARED HOFF
Antelope Staff

The 80th Annual Academy Awards were held on Sunday in Los Angeles. Movie stars from all over the world came to the red carpet for the film industry's biggest night.

Brothers Joel and Ethan Coen were the big winners of the evening, with their film "No Country for Old Men" winning four awards, including best picture.

Taking home the award for best-actor was Daniel Day-Lewis, the star of "There Will Be Blood." It was the second best-actor award collected in the stellar career of Day-Lewis.

Winning best supporting actor was Javier Bardem, who starred alongside Tommy Lee Jones and Josh Brolin in "No Country."

For the ladies it was "La Vie En Rose" star Marion Cotillard in a surprise win for best actress.

Best supporting actress went to Tilda Swinton, who starred alongside George Clooney in "Michael Clayton."

The ceremony featured a strong international flavor, with all four winners of the major acting categories being from abroad. The aforementioned Bardem hails from Spain, Cotillard from France and Day-Lewis and Swinton both from Great Britain.

"I'm always interested in the fashion aspect of the Academy Awards."

Bree Torrez Junior

Senior theatre major Ryan Greene said the show was fairly enjoyable this year compared to years past.

"The speeches and jokes were pretty smart and short. I thought John Stewart did a nice job hosting," Greene said.

The show comes on the heels of the recently ended Writer's Guild Association strike. The 100 day strike ended on Feb. 12, and writing for this year's Academy Awards began immediately as writers went back to work.

Junior psychology major Bree Torrez said she didn't watch all of the show, but caught some of it.

"I got to see some of the dresses, I'm always interested in the fashion aspect of the Academy Awards," Torrez said. "I was also hoping for "Juno" to do well, that was my favorite movie of the year."

Many students had no idea the Academy Awards were even on Sunday night. Between studying, working or just catching up on sleep, UNK students don't have much time for long, drawn-out TV award shows.

"I didn't even know they were on," said freshman Henry

Gant. "They're just so boring to watch, with all the commercials. It's not like the Grammy's, where you have musicians performing."

The night belonged to the Coen brothers and the cast of "No Country for Old Men."

The two shared the best director award as well as the best adapted screenplay award.

Those, along with the best picture award, landed the Coen brothers on an elite list of filmmakers who have won three Oscars in one night.

"The Bourne Ultimatum" won the editing Oscar and swept all three categories in which it was nominated, including sound editing and sound mixing.

There was a tribute to stars, filmmakers and others in cinema who died over the past year.

The montage of photos and film clips ended with a mark of respect for Heath Ledger, who died tragically of a prescription drug overdose last month.

Miss Scarlet in the kitchen with the revolver

Students act in Kearney Community Theater's 'Clue: The Musical'

BY LISA BECKER
Antelope Staff

Clue: The Musical brings new life to the popular board game. The show allows the audience to be part of the mystery. They're practically playing the game while being in the audience.

"The conclusion of the game is actually chosen by an audience member by selecting cards from three decks," said Jenna Johannsen, a UNK student who plays Miss Scarlet in the Musical.

At the start of each show, three audience members select one card each and place it in an envelope. These cards determine how the musical ends.

"There are six options in each of the three categories: six suspects, six weapons, and six rooms. For most of the show, the audience tries to guess the chosen cards. It's definitely a good time because the audience plays along. They're part of the action," Johannsen said.

"Miss Scarlet is a 20-something vixen who is shrewd yet very attractive; the beauty is definitely on the outside with this particular character. She would not make a good friend," Johannsen said.

The show will be playing for two weekends. The first weekend was Feb. 28 and 29. The next show will be Mar. 1 and 2. Those attending the musical can choose to attend the dinner theatre or the musical only. The show starts at 8:00 p.m. with Mar. 2 being a 2:00 p.m. matinee.

"It's not too late to get tickets! There's still two weekends. I would call soon. We've had multiple sold-out performances," Johannsen said.

For tickets to the musical call the Kearney Community Theater (KCT) between 11 a.m. and 5 p.m., Monday through Friday at 308-234-1529.

"I've been involved with Kearney Community Theater since I came to college in 2003. I heard about this show and just decided to show up for the auditions.

It's been a while since I played a "pretty" role. Some of the women I have portrayed haven't been the most attractive," Johannsen said.

"I wanted to be a part of the musical because first off, it was the challenge of the possibility of having 216 different endings to the musical that caught my attention. I mean, what a challenge! I knew each actor in the cast would have to be quick on his or her feet. Secondly, it was Dr. David Rozema's directing debut. He's a brilliant actor and great actors tend to be extraordinary directors. So I was intrigued to work with him. He's just been great. Full understanding of the stage, the actors, and the script," Johannsen said.

"The cast and crew of the musical have been rehearsing for about six weeks now, starting at the beginning of January.

"We love new people at the theater. We always need more volunteers. Just call the theatre for upcoming auditions. The auditions are happening every couple of months with at least five shows each year. Something's always going on," Johannsen said.

Johannsen is participating with other UNK students in the musical, including Minnie Benson, Kyle Kuypers, Thomas Carlson, J.T. Jelkin, and Mallory Mawby.

Johannsen's recent credits include last spring's UNK production of Les Liaisons Dangereuses where she played the Marquise de Merteuil; KCT's Ruthless The Musical where she played Miss Mryna Thorn (2007) and UNK's A Little Night Music where she played Countess Charlotte Malcolm (2006).

"Overall, I have been in six Kearney Community Theater shows and four UNK shows. Each show has been one extreme character to another," Johannsen said.

Johannsen was recently elected the UNK representative for the Kearney Board of Directors for the Kearney Community Theater.

"I've wanted the position for a while now. I am honored. I continually want to be more and more involved with this theatre. It's like a second home. I has great people with a goal to produce wonderful theatre. Attaining this position will allow myself to see where else I can contribute my talents; other than on-stage," Johannsen said.

Johannsen will graduate from UNK in May 2009 with a degree in musical theatre and music business. She graduated from Gibbon High School in 2003.

Other than participating in theater, Johannsen is also the television host of Fox 4 & 17, the local Fox affiliate. She is the guide through each night's entertainment.

"I have a segment called "Out and About with Jenna." If interested, feel free to visit fox417.tv. There you can find additional information about your favorite show. You can also read my daily blog and e-mail me at the web site. Mostly, I get to meet new people on a day-to-day basis. Never a dull moment and it makes me happy the whole time," Johannsen said.

UNK's Japanese Association Movie Night spreads cultural diversity at UNK

BY KELLY BERNT
Antelope Staff

The Japanese Association Kearney hosted a movie night Feb. 21, featuring a Japanese film with English subtitles.

A table with beverages and candy welcomed attendees. Kazuya Yoshino, a Saitama, Japan native, handed out programs as the audience shuffled in. The film, titled "Mononoke-Hime," or "Princess Mononoke," featured an example of the classic struggle when man tries to invade nature. It also gave viewers a historical look into the early days of Japan.

"The film is about old Japan," Yoshino said.

Yoshino said she was content with the event's turnout. "I'm glad to have so many people here," Yoshino said.

A sophomore at UNK, Yoshino has also enjoyed his experience. The aviation systems management major said the people have helped her make the adjustment.

"I like UNK," Yoshino said. "The people are so kind."

Audience member Eric Buchman said he enjoyed the film.

"It was fun to come with friends," Buchman said. The sophomore Kearney native said it also helped him gauge his Japanese speaking skills.

"It helped me see how much I've learned in class," Buchman said. "And it was fun."

There are several reasons the majority of people affected by eating disorders are women.

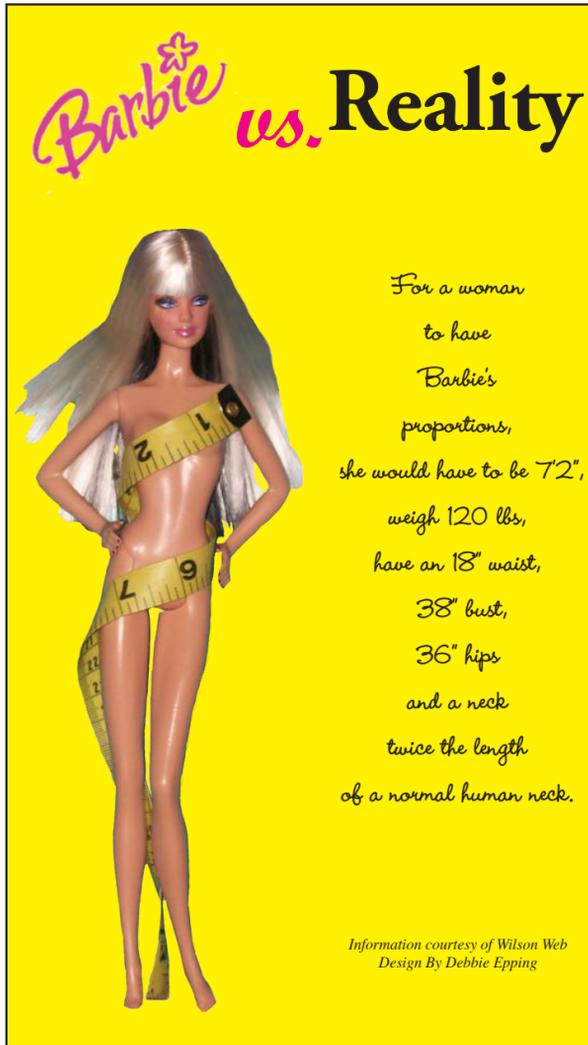

Laurel McKellips, graduate assistant for the Women's Center at UNK, said, "One factor is the media's influence of setting up an unrealistic standard for appearance and the messages from TV, magazines, Internet and ads is that body shape is linked with a person's value or attractiveness."

The National Eating Disorder Association explains, "A study of mass media magazines discovered that women's magazines had 10.5 times more advertisements and articles promoting weight loss than men's magazines did."

"The pressure to fit the unrealistic standard can be very powerful. The message can bombard women so much that they start to agree with the untrue message to judge themselves and others by shape or size. The truth is that everyone has different genes that influence their body shape," McKellips said.

Eating disorders are highly addictive behaviors. Just like any other addiction, it is extremely difficult for a person with an eating disorder to just "stop." The body's natural craving for food versus a person's attempt to deny that hunger results in a vicious cycle.

"Purging gave me this high that I can't explain. It made me want to do it again and again," the freshman said.

Interpretive reporters tackle women's health issues through series of features examining critical topics

When this semester's Interpretive Reporting class gathered for the first time, the class members looked around and realized that the class was comprised entirely of women.

This spurred the idea of focusing a set of features based on women's health issues.

The idea blossomed into seven individual, yet intertwined topics, on female health to be published in The Antelope and offered to hometown newspapers spanning the state.

The series begins in concurrence with National Eating Disorder Awareness Week with an article written by Debbie Epping centered on women's body image.

"I know so many women who struggle with poor body image," Epping says of choosing her topic. "I wanted to raise awareness."

The series continues next week with an article that may change the stereotype that surrounds children playing video games all day. The article is based on "exergaming," a term for the newest trend in fitness, which combines video games and exercise. Melissa Hinkley said she chose the topic because it is a unique way to combat the obesity epidemic.

In the following weeks the articles continue to span issues—not just within campus but the community as well.

Shannon Mathews writes on the new health report cards handed out to Kearney grade school children.

"UNK students and staff are working with public school administration to provide information for parents to help regulate the childhood obesity epidemic," Mathews said.

Jane Mlinar, will focus on various birth control methods. Mlinar said, "Women need to be educated on what is available to them."

Ann Bierbower will examine the emotional symptoms linked to taking hormonal birth control methods in her article.

"Although the research seems limited, many women are feeling similar negative effects and are needing to talk about it," Bierbower said.

Amanda Bell has focused on the controversial HPV vaccination given in a series of shots encouraged for tweens as young as 10 to 11 and young adults.

"It affects me personally, and also many of my peers," Bell said.

Vicki Althage's article will deal with the topic of fertility related to the growing percentage of women waiting to have children until after they have established a career.

"Putting their maternal clocks on snooze," Althage said, can cause fertility complications down the road.

Campus organizations sponsor Eating Disorder Awareness Week

The number of people who suffer from eating disorders is frightening—approximately 10 million females and one million males in the United States fight life-threatening battles.

The effects of eating disorders range from unhealthy obsessions to life-threatening conditions where food becomes the battleground.

"I became obsessed with food—cooking it, smelling it, looking at pictures of it, but I couldn't let myself eat it. Food was the enemy. My dreams were nightmares about eating too much," a UNK freshman, who has struggled with both anorexia and bulimia, said.

People with eating disorders may use food in an attempt to control feelings that they otherwise find unbearable. It is a way for them to cope with excruciating circumstances.

Eating disorders have the highest death rate of any mental illness, including depression. An alarming six percent of people with anorexia will die from their disorder. Irrevocable consequences include brain shrinkage, memory loss, enlargement of the heart, infertility and osteoporosis.

The severe consequences of eating disorders affect more than those plagued by the disease. Family and friends are directly affected by the effects of eating disorders on their loved ones.

Family and friends are often hesitant to approach a loved one with an eating disorder out of fear of alienating the person.

Those suffering from eating disorders are often reluctant to treatment and react with anger or denial.

"When my sister confronted me I hated her for it. It was as if she thought she was some kind of divine intervention who was going to make me change my mind on a dime," the freshman said.

Although treatment often involves psychological counseling coupled with careful attention to medical and nutritional needs, full recovery is possible.

"I started seeing a therapist who helped me realize I couldn't keep living my life controlled by food. I worked with a nutritionist who helped me develop healthy habits. At first I thought the amount of food I was advised to eat was insane. It took me two years of therapy and gradual steps towards healthy eating to completely free myself of my disease," the freshman said.

The road to recovery contains many obstacles and setbacks. It's important that family and friends remain patient and supportive during this time, as there is no quick fix for eating disorders.

"My struggle with eating disorders robbed me of four years of my life that I will never get back. Nobody should have to go through it alone," the freshman said.

Laurel McKellips, graduate assistant for the Women's Center at UNK, said, "Everyone can help to prevent eating disorders by making sure they have a healthy self-esteem and body image themselves. Being aware of the issues involved with eating disorders can be motivating to become an advocate for preventing eating disorders and a support to anyone who has an eating disorder."

The National Eating Disorders Association (NEDA) is the largest non-profit organization in the United States working to prevent eating disorders and provide treatment to those suffering from anorexia and bulimia.

Feb. 24 through Mar. 1 is National Eating Disorder Awareness Week. Established 20 years ago to help raise awareness of eating disorders in America, UNK will host a week of events in observance of NEDAW.

The events are intended for everyone—not just those suffering from a disorder.
